A day in the life: Entrepreneurial Tax

Sarah Macleod, Senior Associate

My tasks vary depending on what services our clients are looking for. One day I might be preparing calculations and drafting reports, other days I may be preparing compliance forms and returns for HMRC. I also do technical research on client queries and drafting a response based on my findings.

In the entrepreneurial tax team we help start-ups and high growth companies understand and claim the tax reliefs and incentives available to them. So that means my day can involve:

- Advice on how start-ups can use share schemes (employees can get company shares in addition to their salary) to attract talented workers.
- Tips and help to follow venture capital programmes (government programmes that encourage high income people to invest in new companies in exchange for tax benefits).
- Assistance and advice to founders on exiting their business.

Overall, I enjoy various clients we get to work closely with, and seeing the work we are doing support their businesses growth.
